VICE-CHANCELLOR'S MESSAGE

I am pleased to welcome you to the 4th Annual Symposium on Law, Governance and Society, under the theme, “Development: As the World Turns, So Should the Law”. The present global climate demands we address the pressing issues of the day on an even more urgent basis. From matters ranging from issues in governance, decent work, economic growth and climate change stemming all the way to issues of quality education and gender equality, the justice system has even more of a responsibility in the present time to be responsive to the changing needs of the environment.

Here in the Caribbean our legal community is challenged to grow in agility as it negotiates the challenges of largely uncharted territory to ensure that it is ready to provide the best advice and deliver timely judgement in response to these needs. The community as it does so must continue to advocate for changes in the law to ensure that all citizens are protected even as it pushes to make access to justice a right for all.

I congratulate the Mona Faculty of Law for hosting another important symposium and my sincere thanks to each of you for making the time to engage in this important discussion.

My best wishes for a successful Symposium.

Blessings!

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

The University of the West Indies (UWI) is once again pleased to support the 4th staging of the Faculty of Law's annual symposium on Law, Governance and Society.

As Principal of The UWI I am honoured to recognise the exceptional work being carried out by the Faculty of Law to bring to light some of the most critical concerns plaguing our society and the influential impact these issues may have on the manner in which law and governance are approached in our society. As a 21st century society the mores, ethics, practices and social consciousness of the populace have evolved considerably. In order to fully assert our own national and regional growth we must be able to redefine our law and governance structures in a manner that provides full civil liberties and rights to all segments of our society, especially previously marginalised communities. As an evolving international community in which conflict, peace, development and growth assume a myriad of meanings and practical implications on the nature of society we must be able to realign our governance structures so that future generations will reap the rewards.

It is therefore my pleasure to support this year's symposium designed to address the advancing nature of our national and international communities and the way in which the law should in turn evolve to support these changes.

I extend warm congratulations to the Faculty of Law, and I look forward to the discourse produced from this symposium.
