Introduction

The Master of Science in National Security and Strategic Studies serves, not only to complement the professional training of the senior managers of the security sector, but in many instances, provides them with the opportunity of exposure to the rigours of Graduate Studies in a field very applicable to their day to day activities.

- The educational emphasis is placed on a policy oriented approach, as well as on critical examination of the theories and concepts that have influenced regional strategic, defence and anti-crime policies.
- Particular attention is paid to emerging strategic trends that pose long-term challenges to Caribbean security as a region and individual countries, and raise complex trade-offs for policy makers.

Programme Objectives:

The primary focus of the Master of Science in National Security and Strategic Studies programme is to provide professional graduate level academic training for students who are likely to occupy the most senior positions in the security sector agencies and allied organizations across the Caribbean, so that they may be better prepared to meet the challenges of their roles.

The programme will cover, inter alia, the following:

- agency roles and functions
- the domestic, regional and international settings of national security policy
- the concepts of military threats
- issues of crime and violence

The course will examine the current policy framework– the national interests and issues currently facing the Caribbean Region; examine the principal theoretical explanations for how the region as on the whole should make policy decisions; and then focuses on who are the players and what are the rules.

NSSS6003 – National Security Issues

To provide a better understanding of the issues affecting the security forces in the Caribbean. The seminar examines the regional security problems and will seek to provide solutions through the research completed by the students.

NSSS6002 –New Dimensions of Power and Security in the Caribbean

This course is designed to give students an understanding of the origin and evolution of security as well as providing the theories and debates within security studies which can be used as a framework for analysing issues in international politics. In tracing the development of security studies, the course will seek to demonstrate the widening and deepening of the concept of security, which at the core will determine how it is being interpreted and studied. The scope of the course's content captures traditional notions of state security as well as the unorthodox theories of security which have emerged in the post-Cold War era. It will focus on the offensive and defensive realist perspective on anarchy, the security dilemma, arms race, and offensive-defensive theory. The unorthodox theories of security focuses on the Copenhagen School (Securitization Theory), Social Constructivism, Critical Security Studies, Feminist Security Studies, Post-structural Security Studies and Human Security. It concludes with an important security threat affecting the Caribbean – drug trafficking – and explores the impact of globalisation on this problem.

The objective of this course is to provide the student with an understanding of aspects of international politics and foreign policy that are deemed relevant to the National Security sector.

NSSS6004 – Contemporary Governance

NSSS6011 – Research Paper

The research paper will be an opportunity to perform substantial analysis on a current security situation and to develop solutions.

MGMT6120 – Research and Quantitative Methods

The main objectives are (i) to develop and transmit knowledge about research methodologies for postgraduate study in the social sciences and related disciplines, and (ii) to encourage critical thinking as a foundation for subsequent study, employment, and personal development. Specific competences to be developed include quantitative, problem-solving, written and oral communication, information technology, and lifelong learning skills. The course is designed to introduce students to the elements of social research, both quantitative and qualitative, and demonstrate its relevance to the business community.

After taking this course the student should be able to (i) conduct research in their chosen field where the research design is internally consistent and based on a theoretical framework, (ii) understand the nature of methodologies, methods, and processes for the purpose of undertaking research in tourism and related areas, and (iii) develop specific skills for the purpose of conducting a small, independent, original, quality research at the graduate (Masters) level.

Course Work Assignments

Course work assignments should be handed in on the due dates and within the time specified by the lecturer. Each student submitting an individual assignment will receive a receipt. For group assignments one receipt will be issued to the group. Course work assignments once receipted will not be released to students.

The student identification number must be used to identify the student(s), submitting the course work assignment. Names must not be placed on course work assignments or on examination scripts.

After grading, course work assignments will not be returned to students. Graded course work can be viewed briefly. Students will not be allowed to take away the graded course work. In order to pass the course work or final examination a graduate student must receive a minimum mark of 50% out of 100%. In order to pass a course you must pass both the course work and the final examination. You must do over the section of the course (course work or final examination) you failed. If you fail both sections you must do over the entire course (course work and final examination). The following symbols are used to communicate examination results:

FE	Fail Examination
F	Fail Examination and Course Work

Students who fail a course twice normally are asked to withdraw from the programme. However, if the Department is aware of extenuating circumstances why a student should be given a third attempt at an examination, a recommendation will be made to the Office of Graduate Studies and Research (upon the student's request for permission to sit the examination for a third time) for approval of the Board for Graduate Studies and Research.
